Description

Description for Arborvitae

Thuja occidentalis, commonly known as American arborvitae, Eastern arborvitae, Eastern white cedar or Northern white cedar, is a dense, conical to narrow-pyramidal (sometimes maturing to broad-pyramidal), often single-trunked, evergreen tree that is native to eastern and central Canada south to northern Illinois, Ohio and New York with scattered populations further south in the Appalachians to North Carolina.

Common name	Flower colours	Bloom time	Height	Difficulty
American arborvitae, tree of life	Brown	Non-flowering	20.00 to 40.00 feet	easy to grow

Planting and care

Grow in average, medium moisture, well-drained soils in full sun to part shade. Somewhat wide range of soil tolerance, but prefers moist, neutral to alkaline, well-drained loams. Intolerant of dry conditions.

Sunlight	Soil	Water	Temperature	Fertilizer
Full sun to part shade	well-drained soil	Medium	medium moisture	apply any organic fertilizer

Caring for Arborvitae

- Avoid full shade where foliage density will substantially decrease.
- Avoid exposed, windy sites.
- Water frequently for the first few months and then begin to taper off.

Typical uses of Arborvitae

Special features: Leaves are scale like and lie on one plane

Ornamental use: na

Medicinal use: American arbor-vitae was much used by many native North American Indian tribes as a medicine to treat fevers, coughs, headaches, swollen hands and rheumatic problems
