Care:

- Sow your Hawaiian baby woodrose seeds in late spring or early summer.
- Nick the seeds with a craft knife first and soak them for 24 hours.
- Plant them 1/2 inch deep and 5 feet apart, in sandy and only moderately fertile soil, along a wall, fence or pergola which they can climb.

Care:

- Refrain from using high-nitrogen fertilizers for Hawaiian baby woodrose, as those may encourage the plants to produce many leaves but few flowers.
- Instead, feed the plants only once a month with a liquid organic bloom-booster fertilizer such as 0-10-10, using about 3 tablespoons per gallon of water.

Special Feature:

The backs of the Hawaiian baby woodrose s leaves and its buds are covered with a white down, so the plant is sometimes also called woolly morning glory.
