Planting and care

Climate Echeveria and other non-hardy succulents look amazing in patio planters. Echeveria are originally from Mexico and Central America. They aren't used to the cold and will die in freezing temperatures. Just because you live where winter is a real winter doesn't mean that you can't enjoy these colorful plants. You can keep them healthy during the cold months by moving them indoors. Then, once the threat of frost has past, gradually move them back outside in the spring. Other people who want to enjoy these colorful plants, but don't want houseplants, treat Echeveria like annuals and just plant anew each spring.
