Description

Description for Gulmohar, Delonix Regia

The flamboyant flame tree provides welcome shade and spectacular color in the warm climates. The attractive, semi-deciduous leaves are elegant and fern-like. Also known as royal Poinciana or flamboyant tree, flame tree is one of the worlds most colorful trees. Every spring, the tree produces clusters of long-lasting, orange-red blooms with yellow, burgundy or white markings. Each bloom, which measures up to 5 inches across, displays five spoon-shaped petals. Handsome branches with feathery foliage and flamboyant scarlet-orange blossoms in late spring and early summer. A semi-deciduous tree native to the island of Madagascar, it is drought and salt-tolerant, making it among the quintessential trees for tropical landscapes, rivalled for its fame only by the coconut palm.

Planting and care

Sunlight	Soil	Water	Temperature	Fertilizer
Full Sun.	Acidic, Neutral, Alkaline	Drought Tolerant, Average Water.	Should not be exposed to temperatures below about 45F (7.2 C).	Use a complete fertilizer with a ratio such as 8-4-12 or 7-3-7.

Caring for Gulmohar

Flame trees perform best in large, open spaces and full sunlight. Plant the tree in a big landscape where it has room to spread; the roots are sturdy enough to lift asphalt. Also, keep in mind that the tree drops spent blooms and seed pods that require raking. The flamboyant flame tree benefits from consistent moisture during the first growing season. After that time, young trees appreciate watering once or twice per week during dry weather.

Well-established trees require very little supplemental irrigation. Delonix flame tree care is limited to an annual feeding in spring. Use a complete fertilizer with a ratio such as 8-4-12 or 7-3-7. Prune out damaged wood after blooming ends in late summer, beginning when the tree is about one year old. Avoid severe pruning, which can put a stop to blooming for as long as three years. Pruning should be used in the early years to create a stronger foundation since the branches tend to be weak.
