Description

Description for Pindo Palm

Pindo palms, also known as jelly palms, grow slowly to a mature height of 15-20 feet with a trunk diameter of 1 to 1 1/2 feet. The fruits of this graceful palm are light orange to brownish red and can be used to make jellies. The seeds can even be roasted for a coffee substitute. Pindo palms are often used as a specimen tree and draw a variety of wildlife with their sweet fruit.

Common name	Flower colours	Bloom time	Height	Difficulty
Jelly palm.	-	-	15-20 feet.	easy

Planting and care

Falling fruit can make a mess, so it is recommended that pindo palms be planted at least ten feet from decks, patios or paved surfaces. Since these trees grow so slowly, it is best to buy at least a three-year-old nursery stock tree unless you are extremely patient.

Sunlight	Soil	Water	Temperature	Fertilizer
Full sun or partial shade.	Any type of soil as long as it is moderately salt tolerant and has good drainage.	Pindo palms are able to survive hot and windy conditions, but it is always best to keep the soil adequately moist.	Do well in colder regions where temperatures may dip to 5 F. (-15 C.).	Feed the palm two or three times between spring and fall, using a palm fertilizer.

Caring for Pindo Palm

Typical uses of Pindo Palm

Special features:

Culinary use: Large, showy clusters of orange-yellow, juicy, edible fruits, the size of large dates, are produced and often used to make jams or jellies.

Ornamental use: This palm makes a great accent which fits well into small areas like courtyards and entries. It is a tough plant and survives in hot urban landscapes and even thrives there if watered and fed.
