Description

Description for Sedum Burrito

Sedum morganianum is a species of flowering plant in the family Crassulaceae, native to southern Mexico and Honduras.

Common name	Flower colours	Bloom time	Height	Difficulty
Donkey tail, burro's tail	Pink to red	Annual	60 cm (24 in)	Moderately easy

Planting and care

Plant sedum seeds in early spring in well-drained, average to rich soil in full sun. Space the plants between 6 inches and 2 feet apart, depending on the type. Low-growing and vigorous species will tolerate partial shade. You can also plant divisions or cuttings instead of seeds. Dig a hole so that the top of the root ball is level with the surface, then place the plant in the hole and fill it in.

Sunlight	Soil	Water	Temperature	Fertilizer
Full Sun to Partial Shade	Well-drained sandy soil	Medium	5 to 7 degrees C (41 to 45 degrees F)	Apply any organic fertilizer

Caring for Sedum Burrito

- Once established, sedums require little care. Check your plants regularly to make sure they are not dry and water when needed.
- After flowering, cut back the plants to maintain their shape. Remember to divide your plants in the spring or fall to control their spread.
- Throughout the summer, divisions and cuttings root readily.

Typical uses of Sedum Burrito

Special features: Pot burrito sedums in a hanging planter or basket so that the stems trail over the edge. Choose a planter with a thick, rounded lip to prevent the stems from breaking or crimping, which they often do in planters with a sharp, narrow edge.

Culinary use: NA

Ornamental use: The plant is used for an ornamental purpose. The leaves are the main ornamental interest of this cultivar. In temper climate, the leaves usually turn reddish-orange in fall.
